

Louisiana

Louisiana's afterschool program participation rate and average amount of time children spend in an afterschool program both remain below the national average. However, after a drop in afterschool program participation from 2004 to 2009, Louisiana saw an increase in 2014 back to their 2004 level of 15 percent. The state did experience a substantial decrease in the time children spend in an afterschool program, dropping from 10 hours per week in 2009 to fewer than 7 hours in 2014. Overall parent satisfaction with their child's afterschool program remains steady and slightly above the national average at 91 percent.
