

Idaho

The percentage of Idaho children participating in an afterschool program has hovered around 9 percent over the past decade, while the national average afterschool program participation rate has continued to climb. While Idaho has slipped further behind other states in 2014, moving from 9 percent down to 8 percent program participation, the national average grew from 11 percent in 2004 to 18 percent in 2014. However, of Idaho parents who are able to take advantage of afterschool programs, an overwhelming majority—9 in 10—are satisfied with them overall.
